Course summary

This course will examine U.S. immigration policy as it is embodied in our laws and procedures and will ask how our nation’s immigration policies reflect on our values as a nation. The course will discuss whom we let in, whom we keep out, how do we treat the people already here, and why.

The course is broken down topically along the lines of a typical immigration law class, but it is not concerned with the mechanics of the immigration laws. The class is intended to reach into the nation’s policy goals, the implications of our policies, and the unintended consequences when policies are poorly designed. For that reason, many of the sessions will culminate in a “controversy du jour” — our whimsical label for a serious immigration topic of current or recent debate.

Grading

The course is designed to test your reasoning and insight, not your recollection, and therefore will have no exams. However, policymaking involves debate, research, and writing, so the course grade will be based on a substantial research paper and classroom discussion. Your course grade will be based on 70% final paper and 30% classroom participation.

Paper. The research paper will be written on a discrete ‘law review type’ topic of immigration law and policy that is approved by the instructors. Information and details about the paper will be provided during the semester. However, you should expect to produce a paper at least 25 pages in length, with appropriate citations, footnotes (not endnotes), and bibliography. Regardless of topic, you are encouraged to produce publication-worthy papers.

There are three deadlines for the papers. The topic selection is due to the instructors by March 2nd. An outline or first draft of the paper is due to the instructors by March 30th. The final paper is due on May 7th.
Classroom participation. We highly value and require class participation. Students are expected to offer their opinions. Students should engage in honest contemplation and dialogue, challenge their own assumptions about immigration policy, and think outside the box as we wrestle with the leading controversies of the day. Accordingly, this course will evolve in response to the interests and creativity of the class.

Classroom

Discussion. Immigration is a controversial topic, and popular and unpopular views will be articulated. Civility is therefore mandatory.

Computers. Laptops in the classroom are permitted, provided their use is limited to note taking and lecture-related research. We do not approve of e-mail, social media, or any other electronic activity that is not related to the class. Classes may not be recorded.

Food and drink. Beverages are permitted. Food is not.

Readings and resources

Each session has specific readings assignments, but you are not expected to master those readings specifically. The purpose of this course is not to test your knowledge of the reading materials, but your grasp of the concepts and your insight into the policy implications. Read the materials and prepare for class with this orientation in mind.

We do not use an assigned text, but rely instead on readings that are available on the Internet, Westlaw, Lexis, and case reporters.

Pay attention to material cited in the footnotes. Those footnotes provide excellent leads for paper topics and resources.

In addition to the reading assignments, you should be aware of the following resources and consider utilizing them in the drafting of your research paper:

Gordon, Mailman, and Yale-Loehr, IMMIGRATION LAW AND PROCEDURE (on Lexis/Nexis) — an exhaustive treatise on immigration and nationality law

Kurzban, IMMIGRATION LAW SOURCEBOOK — a one-volume practitioner’s handbook detailing the current immigration laws

IMMIGRATION BRIEFINGS (available on Westlaw) — a monthly periodical containing in depth discussions of discrete immigration topics
BENDER’S IMMIGRATION BULLETIN (available on Lexis/Nexis) — a monthly periodical containing in depth discussions of discrete immigration topics

INTERPRETER RELEASES (available on Westlaw) — a weekly immigration newsletter

We strongly encouraged you to bring to our attention any outside reading materials you have personally found helpful or worthwhile. Some of our best course materials have been identified by students.
